

Schools Guide to Disability Provisions

Please ensure that the persons in your school/college responsible for Disability Provisions receive a copy of this information

The CSSA Trial HSC Examination Division can provide some Disability Provisions for students who are visually impaired. This provision is available to all schools ordering our papers without additional charge. Applications for Disability Provisions papers for visually impaired students must be received by the Exams Division on or before Friday 5 April 2019.

Please note there are several changes to production of these papers since 2014. Please read the information carefully and ensure that the correct information is provided to us for applications to be successful. Applications must be submitted by the due date. This allows time for the application to be processed and for the production of examination papers. Please understand that late orders may not be accepted.

NOTE: From the 2014 Higher School Certificate examinations, NESAs will provide greater flexibility for students with scotopic sensitivity (also known as Irlen syndrome). Scotopic sensitivity is said to be a form of light sensitivity that can cause reading difficulty, particularly from white paper. Diagnosticians of scotopic sensitivity determine a precise colour that is recommended for a particular student. According to the website irlen.com "the cornerstone of the Irlen Method is its precision-tinted coloured overlays and glasses". From the 2014 HSC exams, students with scotopic sensitivity will be permitted to use a coloured overlay (similar to an overhead transparency) or to wear coloured lenses. Coloured paper will no longer be approved or permitted.

Therefore, the CSSA Exams Division will no longer provide coloured paper for students with scotopic sensitivity as it is no longer approved or permitted by NESAs.
